Supporting Information

Use of pyrolyzed iron ethylenediaminetetraacetic acid modified activated carbon as air-cathode catalyst in microbial fuel cells

Xue Xia\textsuperscript{a}, Fang Zhang\textsuperscript{b}, Xiaoyuan Zhang\textsuperscript{b}, Peng Liang\textsuperscript{a}, Xia Huang\textsuperscript{a}, Bruce E. Logan\textsuperscript{*ab}

\textsuperscript{a} State Key Joint Laboratory of Environment Simulation and Pollution Control, School of Environment, Tsinghua University, Beijing 100084, P.R. China
\textsuperscript{b} Department of Civil and Environmental Engineering, Penn State University, 231Q Sackett Building, University Park, PA 16802, USA

* Corresponding author, Tel: +1 814 863 7908; E-mail: blogan@psu.edu
 Corresponding author, Tel: +86 10 62772324; E-mail: xhuang@tsinghua.edu.cn
Fig. S1 Schematic structure of the pyridinic nitrogen (N6) and quaternary nitrogen (NQ).

Fig. S2 Maximum power densities normalized to the BET surface area during the first week.